Bringing acoustic properties
to your space

Astep now launches Isol floor, as a part of the Isol collection of acoustic lamps designed by David Thulstrup with Snowsound technology.

Embracing the shape of a cylinder, Isol offers elegant functionality pared down to its simplest expression. Envisioned as a decorative element, at the same time functional and minimalist, Isol embodies David Thulstrup's impeccable visual language within interior design together with Astep's innovative approach to design. The floor and suspension lamps are produced in Italy and the result of high-precision work and technological advancement.

The patented Snowsound Fiber textile lends the lamp outstanding soundabsorbing qualities and acoustic performance. Furthermore, supporting Astep's sustainability vision, the fabric is completely recyclable while carrying a Greenguard Gold certification for being a low emitting product that contributes to improve indoor air quality.

"Every detail of the design is the result of fusing acoustic, aesthetic, and architectural qualities in one single product. For instance, the transparency of the textile is key to not only enhance acoustic performance but also create a beautiful, layered effect revealing the vertical elongated light sources within," says designer David Thulstrup.

A seamless transparency is created, while embracing the die-cast aluminium rings, allowing the lamp to melt into the scenery. Part sculpture, part acoustic solution, and part light source, Isol can be used in a variety of combinations and in private and public environments as an aesthetic way of bringing acoustic properties into a space. Alone, it convinces through quiet authority offering a sense of privacy. In multiples, its distinctive character is enhanced – in the suspension version furthermore by connecting the rings to extend lighting and noiseabsorbing power.

Isol Floor and Isol Suspension comes in creme and black finish, both available in two heights.
